Macro photography captures the kind of details the human eyes see, and that is what's so spectacular about it. Capturing a water drop or the texture of a flower petal takes a lot of time and patience, but when you finally get that breathtaking shot, it makes all of that time and patience completely worth it.

CREATIVE

As a child I was always a big fan of the movie Peter Pan. My favorite character in the entire movie was Tinker Bell, because she was the one that sprinkled everyone with fairy dust and helped them fly to Neverland. I wanted to create a picture inspired by the scene where Wendy gets sprinkled with fairy dust and is trying to figure out how to fly.

With the help of a tripod, model, and a fairy dust Photoshop brush I was able to create this picture.

LANDSCAPE

Visiting a breathtaking location has its perks, but being able to capture it in a photo has its benefits too. Landscape photography allows you to relive the feelings you had when you saw these awesome locations in real life

For this picture I really wanted the water to look smooth, so I placed my camera on a tripod to keep it still and I used a long shutter speed to make the water look smooth.

I bought my first Harry Potter book when I was in the 1st grade, and to this day I believe it was the greatest purchase I have ever made. Reading the books and watching the movies made me feel like I was a part of the wizarding world. After picking out the three words that would be the inspiration of this picture (magnifying glass, defend, and foolhardy) I knew that I wanted my conceptual picture to be Harry Potter themed.

My friend Nikki Elliott was kind enough to let me borrow all of her novelty Harry Potter items for this picture, and also let me use her as a model for the picture.
